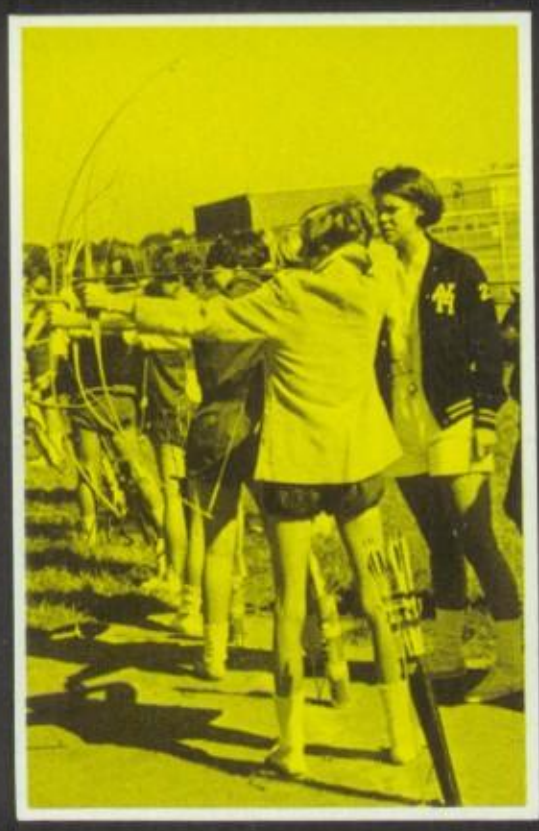
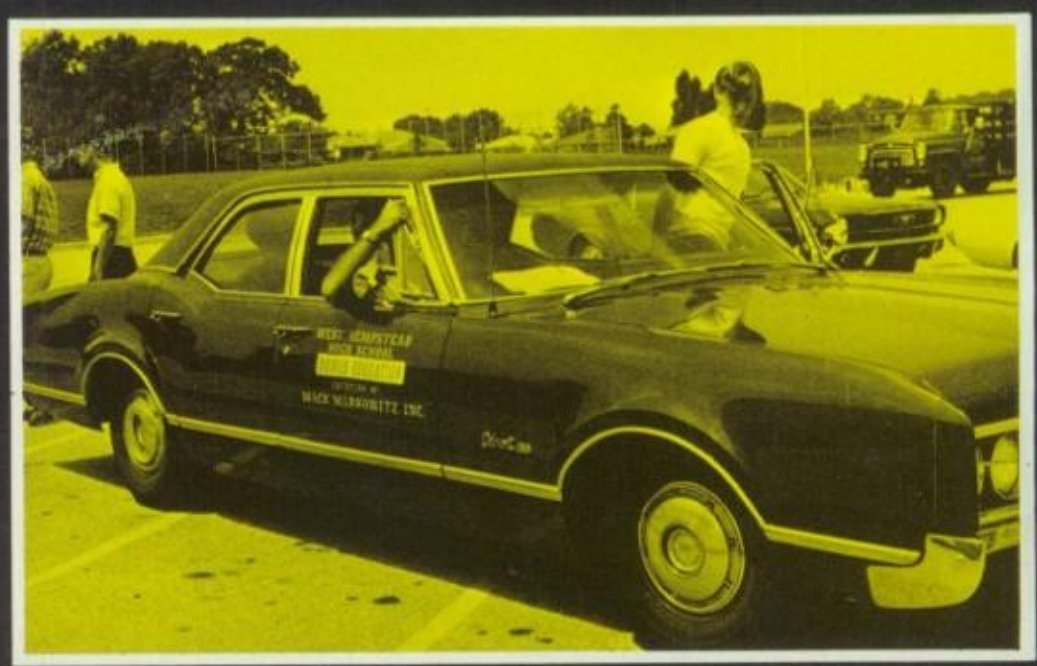
West Hempstead Spirit is all over in classes and clubs, at proms and dances, on the field and track, in cheerleaders and councils—affecting every student.





Throughout his fifteen years of assistance, Westerly has been a successful reflection of each class. We gratefully dedicate this 1968 Westerly to Mr. Leonard Nezin, an artist, teacher, and advisor.

School Afterthoughts

It seems only natural that we should turn away from our activities now and give one last impatient glance at these past few years. Yet there is always something uncomfortable, almost embarrassing, about examining times as they near their completion, precisely when we can do the least to influence them. The things done in this building, this shell of brick and concrete, have had their corresponding moments which once past were whisked away and filed in the archives of youth's time.

For the sake of memoirs and yearbooks we find ourselves occasionally thumbing through some of these dead and yellowing annals. But the futility is soon inescapable and we must return them, misty-eyed, to their rightful place.

Think back on high school if you will. Indulge yourself in the counterfeit fullness of warmed-over nostalgia but call it what it is: not retrospect, just sentiment. And with that we can develop our dried-out dreams and futile fantasies and insert them between the pages with that subtle, inner smile of self-delusion . . .

There were moments of cheer, moments of thought, moments of people: We have witnessed the Black and Gold. Roaring grandstands; soaring pigskin; flashing, bashing, bodies, helmets—glittering mosaic scene of sport and spectator—heralded the age of The Ram.

We have drawn what we could from our classes. There might have been a new idea, a new pattern, or a new combination of old knowledge. There might even have been a precious thought which fascinated us and fit into our scheme of being, an idea cut away from the great body of scholastics from which we could sculpt our own cerebral designs. But if not, there was always a teacher to know, the challenge of a personality for whom we had to perform; and always, always the opportunity to interact with that reservoir of twenty or so lives into which we were immersed for forty-three minutes. And even if only to commiserate about the stifling boredom, it was those few we called our friends who sustained us.

We have loved those we considered our friends, and from them a good word, a passing smile, could bring cheer to a day which had promised little over breakfast. It never mattered that we always knew things were only temporary. We were seniors and possessing the mixed blessing of both climax and conclusion of an age. We would be leaving soon and no longer able to fit into each other's lives, for smiles and friendship are for the spirit and don't heed our pleas for permanence.

. . . But in the end there can be no analysis, no final evaluation, for all that can be said with any certainty is that we are of West Hempstead High School; what's grown is grown, what's destroyed is destroyed. And with that, the stuff of our experience is left to weeping Nostalgia, clouded memories for school afterthoughts.

The Girls Athletic Association offers every girl a wide range of sports after school. Spirited games of volleyball, basketball, badminton, softball, tennis; tense rounds of riflery and archery and bowling; strenuous afternoons of tumbling and modern dance, develop skills, sportsmanship, and character in each of the many participating girls.

The West Hempstead Girls Leaders Club offers interested and qualified girls an opportunity to lead in all phases of physical education, develop individual leadership qualities, and further the education of college-bound students. Annual club activities include a scholarship drive, theater party, camping trip, beach party, pot luck dinner, and induction ceremonies.

Rifle Club

The finest of West Hempstead's athletes are members of the Varsity Club. Its many spirited activities are always appreciated. The Court Jester basketball game, which the club sponsored, scored a high point in school sports life. One of the most successful groups of the Varsity Club is the accurate Rifle Team.
